That the People's party platform as adopted at Omaha and endorsed by the various state and county conventions is a [illegible] of absurdities and devilisms follies no sensible man denies. But it is the custom of the ex-Democratic state and ex-Republicans of Colorado, who have declared their intention of supporting the Weaver electors, to say that the absolute impossibility of the election of Weaver precludes any danger from this source, and that their votes will not be taken as an endorsement of the fallacies of the Farmers' Alliance, but simply as an expression of disapproval of the action of the national Republican party upon the question of free coinage of silver, which is the political question of supreme importance in this state. If there is nothing to change in the attitude upon the silver question of the two great parties, one of which will surely be in the next president, and if there are not other and great questions before the people for their settlement, this argument would be far more reasonable than it is under the present circumstances. So far as the choice of a president is concerned it must be either Harrison or Cleveland and the voters of Colorado have no other alternative. The most that the Weaver men claim to be hoping for is to throw the election into the house, and that surely means the election of the Democratic candidate. But it is generally admitted by fair-minded men that Mr. Harrison in his views of the financial and other questions is far more in accordance with western ideas than is Mr. Cleveland, and this is especially true of the silver question. It is true that Mr. Harrison's views are not in accord with those of many Colorado people, but they are far in advance of those of most people of the east and of Mr. Cleveland. They probably represent the utmost in this line that is possible of accomplishment under present conditions. The international silver conference, inaugurated by Mr. Harrison himself, offers the most promising solution of the problem now before us. It is now in suspense owing to the uncertainties of the election. If Mr. Cleveland is elected it will never come to anything even if it is not altogether postponed, while under Mr. Harrison there is good reason to hope for an international agreement restoring silver to its rightful position. Now to vote for WEAVER, under the reasoning of the new converts to the third party is to ignore the very real difference that exists between the Democrats and the Republican candidates upon this important matter. It is to cast a vote in such a way as to advance the interests of the enemies of Colorado and to injure the chances of success of our friends. One vote does not make very much difference, but one vote for Weaver lessens Harrison's chances by one vote just as much in Colorado as it would in New York or any other Republican state, and by so doing it increases Cleveland's chances. Therefore it is not an argument, but the statement of a simple fact, to say that a vote for Weaver is a vote for Cleveland.

We trust that the voters of Colorado have too much respect for Secretary Foster to be influenced by the sudden and unwarranted attack made upon him by the Republican News. Certainly it will have no effect in this county other than to expose still further the malice and partisanship of the political course of that paper, and to strengthen the support of his friends.

The general approval of Secretary Foster's action is well shown by the list of names which the Denver News quotes in opposition to it. There is hardly one of any prominence or reputation.

There is a chance that England and Russia will be drawn into war over the Behring sea matter, but there is very little chance that the United States will become involved in it.

There are no more earnest friends of some plan for the federal supervision of elections than the southern Democrats who have joined the People's party.

SHOPPING IN LONDON.

American Females Find Themselves Much in Need of a Glossary.

Either the English salesman is an abnormally tactless individual or he has been accustomed to generations of shoppers whose mental capacity has been of the smallest, for he invariably treats one as though one were an idiot of the very first water. As I have said, unless the customer knows exactly what she wants and asks for it in language understood by this popular people, she runs a very slim chance of getting anything at all. Thus, she must not ask for "muslin," but for "long cloth," while if she wants some "swiss" she must ask to be shown "muslin." If she wants some "calico" for her servants' dresses she must not ask for that, but for "print."

"Calico," on the other hand, must be asked for if one wants some cotton or twill shooting. She must not speak of a "spool of cotton" unless she wants to be greeted with the stony stare of vacuous ignorance, but for a "reel of thread," and then it may be placed before her with the smirking query, "And the next thing, miss?" for it may be noted that salesmen and saleswomen who, by the way, have not yet attained the doubtful elevation of our sales "ladies" and "gentlemen"—"misses" their feminine customers to the verge of exasperation. Again, if you ask for a pair of shoes, what in America are known as "ties" will be offered to you, while if you ask for "boots" you may possibly get what you want, though it is hardly probable. The English boot is adapted to the English foot. "You have an American foot," said a bootmaker the other day, "and I haven't a boot in my shop that will really fit you." An American woman's only chance of getting what she can wear upon her feet in this country is to go to a French shop, and then she has to pay about 50 per cent. more than in New York.

You must not ask for a "white skirt," but for a "top petticoat;" a skirt here is only used in describing the outer and visible garment, the inner and more spiritual affairs are all "petticoats." Similarly if one speaks of "a waist," as transatlantic phrase is wont to term the upper portion of a street or other dress, the shopkeeper will turn on one with a pitying smile and remark, "Do you mean a lady's bodice?" while the American "bodice" is here an "underwaist." While if a reference is made to "corsets" she will correct one in the slender fashion, "Oh, you mean a pair of stays." Don't ask for a "morning wrapper" but for a "dressing gown."

If you want a pair of "rubbers" to guard against the London slush and mud, don't try to buy them under that name, but ask for "goloshes." The English have a tradition that Americans all refer to the articles as "gums," and declare that we ordinarily learn of a visitor to "wipe his gums on the doormat," a humorous double entendre which affords them the keenest enjoyment. If you want some cross "Swiss" with which to make accurate caps you must know it by the name of "book muslin," or you will never get it, for, as I have said, the English never come to it one half way and has to find out what the customer wants.

If one were to ask for "paper muslin" he would probably have a fit. He only knows it as "glazed cambric" and resents any other nomenclature. As to things not essentially feminine, but still in the women's department as purchasing agents, "bedspreads" are "quilts," even if not "quilted;" "tidies" are "antimacassars" and "window shades" are "blinds," whether of the roller or Venetian order matters not.—London Cor. Boston Transcript.

Ornamentation of Old Chests.

The method of decoration by means of shot irons was employed in Great Britain chiefly on cypress wood chests—"spruce chests," as they were termed. Cypress wood was believed to preserve against moth and cloth clothes, tapestry curtains, and silks and velvets were put into them. They were much in fashion in the reign of James I of England and VI of Scotland, and they are frequently decorated with subjects from the hunting field, sketched in by means of skewers heated by the fire. The men are dressed in the ugly trunk hose of the period.

It will generally be found that the ornamentation inside the lid of such a spruce chest is quite as rich as that on the front. The top of the chest is always left plain, as it was used as a seat, that is to say, the outside of the lid was undecorated; the inside presents a picture, always in good preservation, as it has been thoroughly protected. As far as the writer's experience goes the oak chests were not carved inside on the under part of the lid; this decoration was used exclusively for the "spruce chests." Some of these cypress chests are not only long, but deep, and are formed of slabs of beautiful well grown trees of very considerable age. We have no reason for supposing that the cypress wood was not home grown, and it would show that very stately and ancient cypresses must have adorned our old gardens.—Cornhill Magazine.

Injurious Employments.

Nitric acid is employed as a solvent for tin in making dyes; by engravers to etch copper; in the manufacture of gun cotton; in the gilding trades, and in preparing the felt for hats. The fumes of it are more irritating to human throats and lungs than is a red rag to a bull, and they cause no end of bronchial and catarrhal affections. The workers in various branches of trade suffer from the fumes of ammonia. They cause inflammation of the eyes and a peculiar skin disease, which it has been suggested may be due to the formation of a soap by the union of the ammonia with the liquid of the lubricating skin glands. If that be true every man could be a peripatetic ambulating soap factory. Men employed in guano works become deaf, and the skin of their noses and foreheads is peculiarly discolored by the ammonia. Their strength fails, and they suffer from anæmia.—New York World.

A Queer Library.

A curious collection of books is contained in the library of Warstentein, near Cassel, in Germany. The books appear at first sight to be logs of wood, but each volume is really a complete history of the tree it represents. The back shows the bark, in which a small place is cut to write the scientific and common name as a title. One side shows the tree trunk in its natural state and the other is polished and varnished. Inside are shown the leaves, fruit, fiber and insect parasites, to which is added a full description of the tree and its products.—Million.

COCKRAN ANSWERED

CLEVELAND DENOUNCED IN JUNE AND EULOGIZED IN SEPTEMBER.

Upon Which Occasion Did the Great Tammany Hall Orator State the Truth? Extracts from Both Speeches Cockran's Present Unpleasant Task.

The Hon. Bourke Cockran formally opened the Democratic campaign in the interior of the state by a speech at Albany. With some of the assertions regarding the issue of the campaign which Mr. Cockran impetuously made before an excited crowd of Democrats on that occasion The Press proposes to deal later. At present we will only discuss the portion of the eloquent Tammany orator's remarks directly concerned with the personality and prospects of Grover Cleveland. It is a characteristic of Mr. Cockran to do with all his might what he undertakes. Hence his panegyric of the perennial candidate was fervid, not to say flamboyant. According to Mr. Cockran, speaking on Sept. 15, Grover Cleveland is a most remarkable and exalted personage. He said:

"The people of this country believe that he typifies today the highest form of development which American citizenship has reached, because in all his life and all his career there is not a single act which needs explanation, and though enemies may criticise him the whole people admire and respect him."

This is fine, very fine. It is the natural language of enthusiastic oratory in which Mr. Cockran is an adept. The Press will not attempt to answer Mr. Cockran. We will allow him to answer himself. Here, for instance, are a few of his statements regarding Mr. Cleveland in that famous and thrilling speech which he made in the hall of the Chicago convention:

"I believe that Mr. Cleveland is a very popular man, a most popular man. I have said that I believe that he is a most popular man—let me say a man of extraordinary popularity every day in the year except one, and that is election day, a popularity which I might describe as tumultuous, but not reducible to votes. It is delusive. So it is calculated to arouse enthusiasm four months before election and to produce disappointment for four years after election.

"I have heard it stated here, I think by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that in 1884 the state of New York protested against the nomination of Mr. Cleveland, and foretold his probable defeat. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is mistaken in his history. The state of New York voted for Mr. Cleveland in 1884. The state of New York, by an overwhelming majority, pronounced his name to this convention. A minority of the delegation protested in the hearing of the nominating body against the great folly of imperiling prospects that looked as fair as any that danced over the Democracy. Now, the prophecy was not ratified out or realized. But why? We are told that Cleveland carried the state. We are told that he was successful at the polls, but do not the gentlemen remember that the victory was due to Burchard rather than to this amazing popularity, which appears to be so great before the eye in springtime and so impalpable in the colder lights of November?

These sentences are taken directly from the version of the Chicago speech revised by Mr. Cockran personally. They show that the opinion of Cleveland's popularity entertained by Mr. Cockran in June differs widely from the opinion expressed by him in September. At Albany Mr. Cockran declared that "we enter tonight on a canvass which must be prosecuted upon lines laid down by him (Cleveland) five years ago." What were Mr. Cockran's views at Chicago regarding the chances of Democratic success upon the "lines laid down five years ago?" Here they are:

"I oppose him (Cleveland) in this convention because he comes between my party and the light of success at the polls. I oppose him in this convention because his candidacy imperils the success of a party which is now visited with bright and alluring prospects.

"I warn this convention, from the experience of every Democrat who has carried the state of New York and none has failed to do it in nine years except Mr. Cleveland—that you cannot get one Mugwump vote without driving away a hundred Democratic votes.

"We have a homogeneous party now. For God's sake, leave it to us. If we be not accorded the nomination that we ask for from the state of New York, give us any citizen in this United States who is a Democrat. Give us some man who will not raise up against us any active hostile force within our own ranks.

"I believe it was the distinguished military hero from Massachusetts, General Collins, who declared there was no Democrat in this Union that would vote against that ticket, but there sit behind him two soldiers whose deeds have not escaped the attention of history, two heroes who have led the Union armies to victory, but who have never made faces at the vanquished foe, and they will tell you here, comrades who fought with them, heroes who sustained them and heroes who lowered their swords to them on the field of battle they will tell you that the soldier vote of New York of whom there are 25,000 at least Democratic—will not support the nomination of Mr. Cleveland. Gentlemen, I submit to you, is it wise to antagonize that vote, to antagonize it without reason, to antagonize it blindly, defiantly, recklessly?"

The Press tenders to Mr. Cockran the assistance of its sympathy. The task of acting as eulogist to the candidate whom he denounced so mercilessly in the Chicago convention must be highly ungrateful to him. And we have his own word to show that he expects from his present efforts nothing but disaster and defeat.—New York Press.

Democrats Are Free Traders.

It has been claimed that the Democrats in the east were not so well disposed toward free trade as the western wing of the party, but even this compromising position must be abandoned now so far as New England is concerned. The New Hampshire Democrats have nominated an out and out free trader for governor, and their platform condemns protection in no uncertain terms. Hon. John E. Russell, of Massachusetts, who was sent out by competent authority to stump Vermont, was an avowed free trader, and the committee who engaged his services in effect indorsed his free trade sentiments.—Burlington (Ia.) Free Press.

An Import Picture.

During the month of July, 1892, our imports of British tin plate were invoiced at 2.96 cents per pound, as against 3.38 cents per pound in July, 1891, the first month of the McKinley duty.—New York Press.

A Possible "Business Revival."

It will be a good thing for the men who print counterfeit detectors of the Democracy ever get into power and put their state bank [illegible]

Open Which Occasion Did the Great Tammany Hall Orator State the Truth? Extracts from Both Speeches Cockran's Present Unpleasant Task.

In the old days, "befo' the war," when wildest money from the state banks literally blanketed the country, every business man, merchant, banker, storekeeper, hotel man in fact, pretty much everybody had a counterfeit detector within easy reach, and it was a wise precaution.—York City (Pa.) Dispatch.

The Mugwump Idol Shattered.

Mr. Cleveland having extended the olive branch to Mr. Hill, with an unction that is more creditable to his judgment than is consistent with his past high mightiness, the Democrats will probably have less to say hereafter of the president's placation of Mr. Platt. But what will the Mugwumps do now that their idol has so incontinently dumped them?—Wilkesbarre (Pa.) Record.

The Slow Tortoise.

The sluggish motions of common land tortoises or "turtles" lead many persons to underrate their intelligence. This "ridiculous slowness," however, arises from the animal's peculiar structure, and is no proof of dullness.

The legs of a turtle look more like crutches than legs. And though the feet form a strong grappling apparatus for pulling away a heavy weight, who could expect swiftness from such tools? Some large tortoises nevertheless make long journeys with more rapidity than might seem possible.

In the Galapagos islands turtles were found by Mr. Darwin able to travel four miles a day—a rate of progress not despicable in creatures provided with such legs; creatures, too, so heavy that six men were often required to lift one of them.—Youth's Companion.

One Way of Telling the Time.

"I can always tell the time by looking at the people who pass my store door," asserts a Chestnut street merchant. "In the early morning the workingmen go down; about 9:30 the clerks and typewriters form the crowd. From 9:30 to 1:30 the solid merchants, bankers and millionaires appear, and then up to 3 or 4 o'clock the shopping army of women are in the majority, mingled with the dudes and men of leisure. The solid men next appear on their way home; the clerks and office people follow at 5 o'clock, and from 6 to 7 the workingmen and girls walk up the thoroughfare."—Philadelphia Press.

Great Infantile Acumen.

Great infantile acumen was displayed by the small boy in a suburban town who swallowed a penny. "Kitty," called his alarmed mother to her sister in the next room, "send for the doctor. Willie has swallowed a penny!"

"No, mamma," interposed the terrified and frightened victim, "send for the minister."

"Why?" faltered his mother.

"Because papa says our minister can get money out of anybody."—New York Tribune.

Storage Batteries for Dwellings.

A company has been formed in Vienna with the idea of serving charged storage battery cells to the houses, in the same way in which milk, ice and other commodities are served. The wagons for supplying these accumulators make regular trips through the suburbs of Vienna daily, distributing their cells fully charged and taking away others whose energy has been exhausted.—Exchange.

The county commissioners have just received eighteen new ballot boxes for use at the coming election The official ballot this year will be nearly as large as a newspaper, and in precincts where a large vote is cast it will be necessary to have an unusually large box The given globes in these boxes are in two parts joined by brass rims, and the box looks like a churn The cost of the boxes was $30 a piece, or $600 for the lot, including the freight.

Word has just been received that Mr Lee Kennedy entered the Sophomore class at Princeton without conditions. No better assurance need be had of the thorough work being done by Colorado college and Cutler academy than the fact that students from the latter have entered Yale with honors, and that from the Freshman class of the college students have entered advanced classes in leading institutions of the east

Policeman Steve Harlan was bitten by a dog Tuesday that he was trying to exterminate. He did not consider the matter of much consequence but yesterday his arm had swollen to the shoulder and he was compelled to quit work

An Indian Amulet

In India a variety of gems and stones are used as amulets The most common is the selagrama, a stone about as large as a billiard ball and which is perforated with black This is supposed to be found only in Gandaki a river in Nepaul. The person who possesses one of these stones is esteemed highly fortunate, he preserves it in a clean cloth from whence it is sometimes taken to be bathed and perfumed He believes that the water in which it is washed if drank has the power to preserve from sin Holding it in his hand the dying Hindoo expires in peace, trusting in a stone rather than in the living God —Detroit Free Press.

The Third Founder

"Third founder of Rome" was the title given to the Roman general Caius Marius on account of his repeated triumphs over the public enemies of his country, particularly for his successful conduct of the Jugurthine war, and for his decisive victories over the combined forces of the Ambrones and Teutones near Aquae Sextiae (Aix), in 102 B C and over the Cimbri on the plain of Vercellae (Vercelli) in 101 B C —Brooklyn Eagle.
